Admiral Stansfield Turner
Director

Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Admiral Turner:

In mid-April the U.S. Military Academy's Debate Council and Forum will sponsor an annual trip to Washington, D.C. for approximately forty selected cadets who have demonstrated excellence in debating and participating in student conferences on various public policy issues. They will be provided presentations with discussion periods by a number of government agencies. At this stage in planning, it appears that Department of State, NSC Staff, ISA, Army DCSOPS, OCLL and the Senate Armed Services Committee will be able to participate.

We would be most appreciative if your office would participate in this program. Two years ago, the single most educational and enjoyable experience for the cadets on this trip was a two-hour session with the Intelligence Community Staff, including brief comments by the Director and Deputy Director. Incidentally, I was told that the Staff enjoyed the exchanges as much as the cadets.

The date we have in mind for a visit to your agency is Friday, 15 April. The most beneficial program for the cadets would involve one hour (0800-0900) on the roles and missions of the Intelligence Community Staff and the Central Intelligence Agency and a second hour (0900-1000) on threats to NATO. We would hope that half of each hour could be used for cadet questions. Both the presentations and discussions are necessarily at a rather high level of generalization, given time constraints. However, this format has worked well over the years for our cadet undergraduate students.

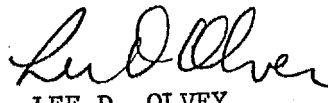

15 March 1977

MADN-J
Admiral Stansfield Turner

We realize that this is asking a great deal of you and your staff, especially at this time. We make the request especially mindful of your personal dedication to officer education.

Sincerely,

LEE D. OLVEY

Dear Admiral Turner:

I wish to express the gratitude of the Department of Social Sciences and the Debate Council and Forum for the kind attention shown to members of the latter organization by your staff during their visit on 15 April. I understand that the project had your personal attention, for which we are especially appreciative, given the demands on your time. The cadets thoroughly enjoyed their morning at the CIA, from the briefings to the tour. Please extend our appreciation to Mr. Knoche and the rest of the briefing team, and especially to who did a superb job of coordinating the entire show.

Thank you for all of the time and effort which obviously went into the arrangements for our visit to the CIA last month. I think the effect of the briefing was to demystify your organization, and to create a respect for the caliber of the intelligence product. By your efforts, and those of your colleagues, you have certainly paid back the debt for your earlier experience on a similar trip. Please accept my personal thanks for making my job an easy one.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Admiral Turner

FROM : Commander Thibault

SUBJECT : West Point Cadets' Visit to CIA

1. The visit, as set up in the schedule (Tab B), could be done just as well at the Point. The cadets spend all their time in an auditorium/conference room being talked at. All they see is the outside of the building and the lobby. Why bother?

2. Recommend:

- Welcome by Admiral Turner (10 minutes)
- Briefing on IC, its parts (including CIA) and how it all fits together and works (30 minutes)
- Walking tour of facilities (stressing primarily the resources available) with a short pitch at each stop:
 - o Library (Special retrieval systems?
How different from other libraries?)
 - o Press Center (monitoring the news services;
what is done with the news, etc.)
 - o Operations Center
 - o A lab?

3. That way they hear how the IC works and see how one component does its job. If we can't start opening up a little to folks with Secret clearances, there isn't much hope for the public.

Very respectfully,

Intelligence is Vital. We depend upon intelligence to enhance our security and increase our effectiveness in many ways, including:

- + Basis for Informed Decision Making. Intelligence provides an important part of the evidential base upon which national decision makers' decisions are founded, and enables them to make decisions which are more timely, more relevant and more economical.

- + Force-Multiplying Effect: Provides knowledge of likely adversaries, permitting design of US forces to deal with real contingencies, and application of them where they can have the greatest impact.

- + Arms Limitation Agreements: Permits verification of compliance with agreements by other parties, without which we could not take the risk of entering into such pacts. Important contribution to peace-keeping and reduction of international tension.

- + Insurance Against Surprise: Insurance, to extent possible in uncertain and changing world, against surprise in current terms and in evolving technology. Permits taking steps toward crisis avoidance, and in long term toward dealing with technological advances made by adversaries.

Intelligence Community Under Review. The President has ordered a comprehensive review of the purposes, organization and functioning of United States intelligence, which is now underway. Expected to result in an Intelligence Community which is more closely knit, better managed, and even more accountable.

Important Reforms Have Taken Place. Much has been said and written of past misdeeds within intelligence agencies, but much less attention has been given to important reforms which have been instituted in recent years and which give us an intelligence establishment which is closely monitored, extensively reviewed, and subjected to searching oversight from both Executive and Congressional branches.

Commitment to Public Service. We are glad to have you with us, and to have the chance to tell you something about our business. We are dedicated to public service, and welcome such chances to interact with others who, like you, are entering upon public service careers.
